31st May / 1st June 2014 THE ASCENSION OF THE LORD

In our first reading according to Luke, Jesus continues and completes his saving work after death. The same Jesus who died is now alive. The same Holy Spirit who was active in Jesus' choice and instruction of the apostles will inspire the apostles' testifying to Jesus as the one who represents the Kingdom of God, a divine role not confined to Palestine, but intended for the whole of humanity. Jesus' being taken up into heaven is an imaginative presentation of his true destiny and of his unique relationship with God the Father, of his divine Sonship which the apostles experience, not for their own benefit but in order to communicate the meaning of the whole of Jesus' career to others. Their role is not to know about the time for the final establishment of God's Kingdom, but, impelled by the Holy Spirit, to bring it about, they are not to look to heaven, waiting passively for Jesus to come, but, as his agents, to represent him on earth.

The message of Jesus' ascension is, however, not exclusively for us personally, but for us as the Church, commissioned to be witnesses of the Risen Jesus throughout the whole world. Jesus' words to the apostles before his departure set the programme for the Church for all time. In Luke's day, we in the British Isles were the end of the earth. So today we have a much larger task on our hands. But we still have hope because of the impelling present of the Holy Spirit promised to us by the ascended Jesus. Luke has presented his message in a highly imaginative way, and even today on the Mount of Olives, pilgrims may be shown marks in the rock alleged to be those of Jesus' feet remaining after his ascension. Indeed, Ignatius of Loyola, returning from his pilgrimage to Jerusalem, made a detour to verify the direction in which Jesus was facing as he left the earth. We are dispensed from being concerned about such details while being challenged to look for the real meaning of Jesus' ascension.

Did you know...237 families in Sao Paulo, Brazil, have won the right to secure permanent housing after the municipal government signed over £3 million to purchase the Mauá building – their home for the last seven years? The Mauá community faced the threat of eviction on
